

The Mirror

you have made me something I was not if you exist it is not me but the way I want you that has become like a ghost assumed a presence some image desperate as the fingers that run through your hair from a distance; the sweat from our brows drops into the ocean becomes part of everything until the shadows of our bodies pass each other like pearls of steam on a mirror